

REINFORCING WSH FOR BUSINESS SUSTAINABILITY

19-20 SEPTEMBER 2022 · SINGAPORE EXPO

How can WSH help your business for long-term resilience and growth?

“Countries have spent the last two years adapting to effects of COVID-19, and have undergone a foundational shift in how we live, work and play. Businesses must now look beyond short-term survival and pivot to long-term resilience and growth. Our speakers will share how good WSH is good for business sustainability over the long-term.”

– Mr John Ng, Chairman of the WSH Council

With global uncertainties such as rising business costs, manpower constraints and supply chain challenges, companies are hard-pressed to put WSH at the core of their business. That said, improving WSH is a worthy investment that will reap long-term rewards.

With management taking the lead to make WSH a priority, and empowering workers to take charge of their WSH and their co-workers', companies can react faster to address hazards and risks at the workplace.

When companies prioritise the WSH of their workers, including their mental well-being, they build the resilience, job longevity and productivity of their workers. Workers can be assured that their company cares for them and their health.

Implementing WSH can be challenging for companies already grappling with other business challenges. This is where technology can help companies simplify and enhance their WSH processes, and improve their WSH performance, allowing them to stay on top of changing norms.
