Managing Comfort, Cost, and Carbon Reduction of Sustainable Buildings

Thursday, 1 August 2024 | In-Person Event

In greening the built environment, there are three key considerations: occupant comfort, cost optimisation, and carbon reduction. Achieving these three “Cs” may seem like a distant goal, but innovations in green technology can move them to reality. Harnessing the rich insights from utilities data, the speed and predictive power from Artificial Intelligence (AI) and the Internet of Things (IoT), together with seamless integration into existing building management systems, building owners and facility managers can be empowered to advance sustainability outcomes.

This SGBC Seminar, organised in collaboration with SGBC Member SP Digital, a subsidiary of SP Group, takes a holistic approach to transforming buildings into sustainable and value-creating properties. Join us as we look at smart utilities management that includes granular monitoring and analyses of utilities consumption across a portfolio of premises, micro-climate control of spaces within a building, as well as electric vehicle (EV) charging capabilities of the property. With a good approach to setting carbon targets, achieving net zero can be made possible.
